Preface

The Department of Defense (DoD) has assessed service member experiences with sexual assault and harassment since at least 1996, when Public Law 104-201 first required a survey of the “gender relations climate” experienced by active-component forces. Since 2002, four “Workplace and Gender Relations Surveys,” as they are known in 10 U.S.C. 481, have been conducted with active-component forces (in 2002, 2006, 2010, and 2012). DoD conducted reserve-component versions of this survey in 2004, 2008, and 2012.

The results of the 2012 survey suggested that more than 26,000 service members in the active component had experienced unwanted sexual contacts in the prior year, an estimate that received widespread public attention and concern. In press reports and congressional inquiries, questions were raised about the validity of the estimate, about what “unwanted sexual contact” included, and about whether the survey had been conducted properly. Because of these questions, some members of Congress urged DoD to seek an independent assessment of the number of service members who experienced sexual assault or sexual harassment.

The Sexual Assault Prevention and Response Office within the Office of the Secretary of Defense selected the RAND Corporation to provide a new and independent evaluation of sexual assault, sexual harassment, and gender discrimination across the military. As such, DoD asked the RAND research team to redesign the approach used in previous DoD surveys, if changes would improve the accuracy and validity of the survey results for estimating the prevalence of sexual crimes and violations. In the summer of 2014, RAND fielded a new survey, called the RAND Military Workplace Study.

This Annex to Volume 2 contains detailed tabular results for the DoD active component. The complete series that collectively describes the study methodology and its findings includes the following reports:

- Sexual Assault and Sexual Harassment in the U.S. Military: Top-Line Estimates for Active-Duty Service Members from the 2014 RAND Military Workplace Study
- Sexual Assault and Sexual Harassment in the U.S. Military: Top-Line Estimates for Active-Duty Coast Guard Members from the 2014 RAND Military Workplace Study

Statistical Analysis and Reporting Conventions Used in This Report

The statistical analyses presented in Volume 2 and this annex employ statistical procedures designed to reduce the likelihood of drawing inappropriate conclusions or compromising the privacy of respondents.

All survey respondents were assured in the survey Privacy Statement that our reports would not include analyses conducted on subsets smaller than 15 respondents. For that reason, the annexes do not include sample statistics (including confidence intervals) computed within groups smaller than 15 unweighted respondents. If such a cell appears in a table, the point estimates and its confidence intervals are replaced with “NR” (not reportable).

These annex tables contain estimates that vary dramatically in their statistical precision. This occurs because some percentages are estimated on more than 100,000 respondents, while others are estimated on small subsamples. To reduce the likelihood of misinterpretations, highly imprecise percentages are not reported. Specifically, percentages estimated with a margin of error greater than 15 percentage points are replaced with “NR,” where the margin of error is defined as the larger half-width of the confidence interval. In such cases, the confidence intervals, which can be measured precisely, are still presented to communicate the range of percentages that are consistent with the data. That is, a confidence interval of 45 percent to 97 percent, for instance, indicates that we can have 95-percent confidence that the correct value for the population lies within that range. Conversely, we have 95-percent confidence that the true value for the population is not lower than 45 percent or higher than 97 percent.

The results reported in this annex are subject to the limitations of self-report survey research. A full investigation of the experiences described by respondents could find that incidents we do not classify as sexual assault, sexual harassment, or gender discrimination may indeed qualify as actual violations, whereas some of those we classify as sexual assault, sexual harassment, or gender discrimination may prove not to be such violations.

Editor’s note: Below its title, each table contains the survey question(s) on which the results are based; the entire survey instrument is contained in Volume 1 of this series.

Table A.24.a
Percentage of members who officially reported the single or most serious assault among members who experienced a sexual assault in the past year, by gender

SAFU23: Did you officially report this unwanted event to the military? This could have been either a restricted or unrestricted report.

Note: The following definition was kept on screen for items SAFU23, SAFU24, and SAFU25:

- DoD provides two types of sexual assault reports.
- Restricted reports allow people to get information, collect evidence, and receive medical treatment and counseling without starting an official investigation of the assault.
- Unrestricted reports start an official investigation in addition to allowing the services available in restricted reporting.

Table B.8.a

Number of offenders involved in the sexual harassment or gender discrimination among members who experienced sexual harassment or gender discrimination in the past year, by gender

Derived variable combining responses by those who had one experience (SHFU2) with responses by those who had more than one experience (SHFU2a). “Group” corresponds to SHFU2 response ‘b’, or SHFU2_1 response ‘b’. Individual corresponds to SHFU2 response ‘a’ or SHFU2_1 response ‘a’

SHFU2: [Was this upsetting experience/were these upsetting experiences] the result of behavior by:

- a. One person
- b. A group of people in the same setting
- c. Different people in different situations [if ‘c’, show SHFU2_1]

SHFU2_1: You indicated that you had several situations like this happen to you. For the next series of questions that refer to the “upsetting situation” please think about the situation since [X date] that had the biggest effect on you – the one you consider to be the worst or the most serious.

Was the upsetting behavior in that situation due to:

- a. One person
- b. A group of people

In early 2014, the Department of Defense Sexual Assault Prevention and Response Office asked the RAND National Defense Research Institute to conduct an independent assessment of the rates of sexual assault, sexual harassment, and gender discrimination in the military—an assessment last conducted in 2012 by the Department of Defense using the Workplace and Gender Relations Survey of Active Duty Members. The resulting RAND Military Workplace Study invited close to 560,000 U.S. service members to participate in a survey fielded in August and September of 2014. This Annex to Volume 2 contains detailed tabular results from this survey for the DoD active component. It includes estimates of the number of service members who experienced sexual assault, sexual harassment, or gender discrimination in the past year, as well as detailed results about the characteristics of those incidents, decisions to report, and experiences with response and legal systems for both male and female service members. It also includes results on service members' beliefs and attitudes about these problems.
